Angie Teague Grissom Named President of The Rainmaker Companies

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (February 26, 2013) – The Rainmaker Companies is proud to announce the promotion of Angie Teague Grissom to President. Grissom formerly served as Executive Vice President and Chief Operating Officer. As President, she will oversee the firm’s three consulting, training and alliance divisions. Angie is a 1995 graduate of Marshall County High School.

“Angie has steadily grown her capabilities and delivered successful results for our clients each of the 12 years she has been on our team,” said founder and CEO Troy Waugh. “Our clients consistently commend Angie for helping them achieve increased profits, smoother operations, improved compensation systems and employee engagement. Angie is committed to providing Five Star service to our clients nationwide, and as a result, her team has led our company’s growth over the last several years.”

Named one of the Top 100 Most Influential People in Accounting by Accounting Today, Grissom is a frequent presenter at national conferences and renowned for her influence on and passion for the industry. “Angie is masterful at guiding firms to develop short- and long-term goals that lead to sustained growth and success,” states Patrick Pruett, shareholder and president of Rainmaker Alliances. “Her proven knowledge and skills transform the lives of clients through consulting, coaching, training and developing accountability within some of the nation’s largest accounting firms.”

The Rainmaker Companies is a leading provider of alliance, consulting and training services focused exclusively on the accounting profession. Launched in 1991, Rainmaker offers transformational training and strategic planning to promoting growth as well as resource sharing for accountants in public practice.
